Pharmacovigilance as Career Guidelines

Pharmacovigilance, which is one of the unique careers, is associated with life science and pharmacy. The role of this scientific discipline is to analyse the side effects of drugs; they monitor the safety of drugs that are available in the market. Whenever any effect is reported, the pharmacovigilance professionals are the ones who follow up with the case and carry out the necessary tests, etc. accordingly. Briefly, pharmacovigilance professionals have to monitor, assess, detect and prevent the adverse effects of medicines.

How To Pursue A Career In Pharmacovigilance:

Candidates who have graduated from life sciences degree such as botany, zoology, biotechnology, microbiology, biochemistry, genetics, etc. are eligible to pursue this field. One can also pursue pharmacovigilance with chemistry as a subject at postgraduate or undergraduate level. However, 50% marks in aggregate are required. Pharmacovigilance Courses After their graduation, one can take up a certificate or a diploma course related to the pharmacovigilance. There are many certificate courses available for interested candidates. However, the duration varies from one course to another. Institute of Clinical Research India (ICRI), which has branches across the country, offers diploma courses in pharmacovigilance. The Faculty of Clinical Research (FCR) offers one-year postgraduate diploma and executive diploma course in pharmacovigilance. The Professional Certificate in Pharmacovigilance, offered by Catalyst Clinical Services, is also one of the best available courses. Pharmacovigilance Scope India is one of the largest producers of pharmaceuticals in the world and is popular even for exporting the pharmaceuticals. There are more than 8000 licensed drug manufacturers in India which will recruit pharmacovigilance professionals in good numbers. There are many job opportunities abroad, in countries like the United States and the European countries, too. Pharmacovigilance Opportunities As stated above, there will be no shortage of jobs in this field. Candidates will find many job opportunities in pharmaceutical companies along with a few positions in the public sector. Some of the top recruiting companies are Dr Reddy's lab, Cipla, Ranbaxy Laboratories, Johnson & Johnson, Matrix laboratories ltd., Pfizer, Ranbaxy, Asian Clinical Trials, Merck, and Novartis.

Smt. Sharadchandrika Suresh Patil, College of Pharmacy, Chopda

Pharmacovigilance Job Responsibilities:

The roles and responsibilities of the pharmacovigilance professional include tracking of all the reports related to drugs. They have to review and assess all the documents on drugs. The professional has to enter the database reports as well besides performing the label assessment. Pharmacovigilance Salary After completing the certificate or diploma course in pharmacovigilance, one can start their career in this profession.

Nanorobotics as a Nanomedicine

Potential uses for nanorobotics in medicine include early diagnosis and targeted drug-delivery for cancer, biomedical instrumentation, surgery, pharmacokinetics, monitoring of diabetes, and health care.

In such plans, future medical nanotechnology is expected to employ nanorobots injected into the patient to perform work at a cellular level. Such nanorobots intended for use in medicine should be non-replicating, as replication would needlessly increase device complexity, reduce reliability, and interfere with the medical mission.

Nanotechnology provides a wide range of new technologies for developing customized means to optimize the delivery of pharmaceutical drugs. Today, harmful side effects of treatments such as chemotherapy are commonly a result of drug delivery methods that don't pinpoint their intended target cells accurately. Researchers at Harvard and MIT, however, have been able to attach special RNA strands, measuring nearly 10 nm in diameter, to nanoparticles, filling them with a chemotherapy drug. These RNA strands are attracted to cancer cells. When the nanoparticle encounters a cancer cell, it adheres to it, and releases the drug into the cancer cell. This directed method of drug delivery has great potential for treating cancer patients while avoiding negative effects (commonly associated with improper drug delivery). The first demonstration of nanomotors operating in living organism was carried out in 2014 at University of California, San Diego. MRI-guided nanocapsules are one potential precursor to nanorobots.

Another useful application of nanorobots is assisting in the repair of tissue cells alongside white blood cells. Recruiting inflammatory cells or white blood cells (which include neutrophil granulocytes, lymphocytes, monocytes, and mast cells) to the affected area is the first response of tissues to injury. Because of their small size, nanorobots could attach themselves to the surface of recruited white cells, to squeeze their way out through the walls of blood vessels and arrive at the injury site, where they can assist in the tissue repair process. Certain substances could possibly be used to accelerate the recovery.

The science behind this mechanism is quite complex. Passage of cells across the blood endothelium, a process known as transmigration, is a mechanism involving engagement of cell surface receptors to adhesion molecules, active force exertion and dilation of the vessel walls and physical deformation of the migrating cells.By attaching themselves to migrating inflammatory cells, the robots can in effect "hitch a ride" across the blood vessels, bypassing the need for a complex transmigration mechanism of their own. As of 2016, in the United States, Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulates nanotechnology on the basis of size.
